Reflection Q&A:

1. Did your estimations reflect the actual effort?

Yes, the estimations accurately reflected the actual effort by using the Fibonacci sequence to measure relative effort, complexity, and uncertainty. For instance, a complex User Story like "Submit Lost Luggage Claim" was given a higher estimate (8 points) because it involved database interactions and validations. Simpler tasks were given lower points. This relative sizing made it easy to gauge the actual workload before starting the sprint.

2. Was your backlog well-prioritized?

Yes, the backlog was well-prioritized based on business value and user needs. We ensured that the core functional requirements needed to get the portal running—such as passenger registration, login, and claim submission—were tackled in Sprint 1. Secondary features, like tracking timelines and uploading supporting documents, were scheduled for Sprint 2, keeping the Agile backlog highly structured.

3. How did your simulated sprint align with your plan?

The simulated sprint aligned perfectly with our initial plan. We successfully populated the sprint with our selected backlog items and progressed the tasks across the Agile workflow from To Do → In Progress → Done. Because we planned a realistic number of Story Points for our sprint scope, all selected User Stories were completed within the simulated 1-week duration without any unfinished work left over.

4. What insights did the burndown chart give about your team's capacity?

The burndown chart provided clear insights into our capacity by visually showing the amount of work completed versus the total work remaining. The chart displayed the remaining values dropping steadily to zero by the end of the timebox, which indicated that our team's capacity perfectly matched our planned velocity. It proved that we committed to the right amount of work during sprint planning and successfully avoided scope creep.
